PROJECT KHAJOOR

Introduction

Project Khajoor is Enactus IGDTUW's sustainability-driven social enterprise focused on converting discarded date seeds into a healthy and environmentally sustainable coffee alternative.

The project was conceptualized to address two major challenges simultaneously: the underutilization of agricultural waste and the increasing demand for healthier beverage alternatives. By transforming date seeds into a value-added product, the project contributes to sustainable consumption patterns while creating economic value from waste materials.

Problem Statement

Date seeds are commonly discarded as agricultural waste despite possessing significant nutritional and commercial potential. The disposal of such waste contributes to environmental inefficiencies and missed economic opportunities.

Simultaneously, excessive dependence on caffeine-based beverages has increased consumer demand for healthier alternatives that provide a similar experience without associated health concerns.

Project Khajoor addresses these challenges by developing a caffeine-free beverage derived from upcycled date seeds, thereby creating environmental, social, and economic value.

Objectives

The primary objectives of Project Khajoor are:

- To create value from agricultural waste through product innovation.
 - To promote circular economy principles.
 - To develop a healthier alternative to conventional coffee.
 - To establish a sustainable and scalable social enterprise.
 - To generate environmental and economic impact through responsible production and consumption practices.

PROJECT DHAAN

Introduction

Project Dhaan is Enactus IGDTUW's sustainability-driven social enterprise focused on transforming agricultural waste into environmentally responsible lifestyle products. The project addresses the issue of agricultural residue disposal by utilizing rice husk-based materials to create reusable mugs that promote sustainable consumption while reducing environmental impact.

The project was conceptualized to bridge the gap between environmental sustainability and consumer behavior by providing functional, aesthetically appealing, and eco-friendly alternatives to conventional products. Through innovation, awareness generation, and responsible production practices, Project Dhaan aims to create both environmental and economic value while fostering a culture of sustainability among consumers.

Problem Statement

India generates millions of tonnes of agricultural waste annually, a significant portion of which remains underutilized or is disposed of through environmentally harmful methods such as open burning. Rice husk, a by-product of rice processing, is one such material that often contributes to pollution despite possessing significant reuse potential.
